NATIONAL GED DAY
SEPTEMBER 16

The first annual National GED Day is coming up on September 16th.

What is National GED Day?

National GED Day is a time to reflect on the hard work and dedication of GED learners, educators, graduates, and everyone who supports them throughout their educational journey. It's a day to celebrate GED achievements and the brighter futures that come through education.

Tag @GEDTestingService and #NationalGEDDay on social media, and shout out your students or your favorite GED-related memory.

Ideas to celebrate National GED Day locally:

1. Celebrate adult learner and adult educator success stories. Post them on your website, local paper, hallway bulletin boards, etc. For more information, visit our website or GED posts on Facebook and Instagram.

2. Hold GED celebrations at your center, inviting recent GED grads to share their journeys with learners.

3. Invite GED State Relationship Managers to present on the GED at your center or community.

4. Educate advocates by hosting events as National GED Day is during National Adult Education and Family Literacy Week.

5. Work with local policymakers on a proclamation of National GED Day and hold a recognition event. A proclamation template is included at the end of this list.

6. Join the Coalition on Adult Basic Education's Educate & Elevate America, commitment to adult education pledge.

7. Hold a job fair connecting adult learners to employment opportunities.

8. Host a literacy forum on the intersections between adult and family literacy, poverty, health, immigration, and more.

9. Remember to use social media to raise awareness during the week. Tweet facts, post polls or petitions, and share stories. Here are some great examples from scaleLIT's Adult Education & Family Literacy Week.

10. Encourage adult learners to take children to the library that week, help with homework, read a book, and/or visit a bookstore. Please suggest they take photos to be displayed at your adult education program.
